Tented City on Dininny Flats Replaced by Wooden Barracks

CCC Camp CE-19 Rush to Near Completion by Lieut. Johnson—Men All Housed at Addison Dam Site—Finishing Touches to be Added by End of Next Week.

The tented city known as CCC camp CE 19 and made up of men from Company 231, is fast becoming a housed city. Where wood, plumbing fixtures, tools and mud holes were a short six weeks ago, there are now five fully equipped buildings, an administration quarters, latrine and shower room, and the mess hall and recreation center are fast reaching the completed stage.

Lieutenant Willard H. Johnson, engineer officer in charge of construction is completing his third construction job on CCC camps in this Second Corps Area. He annouced yesterday that he hopes to complete all construction work by the end of next week.

The entire group of men at the camp will be in quarters of wood by tonight and the mess hall will be in use over the week-end.

Problems that have had to be confronted by Lieut. Johnson and his staff have included: building materials, planning the camp, problems of sanitation, water, sewage disposal, placing of the various rooms within the building for economy, painting, and constructing buildings for the maximum of heat, comfort, light and convenience of the men.

The schedule was somewhat interrupted during the building when a group of Mississippi boys were brought to the camp, with orders that they be placed in buildings immediately. The construction work had been progressing so that all buildings would be under cover, and then on days of inclement weather the workers would be protected. This plan had to be abandoned for a while for concentration on a few buildings.

The frame work and walls have now been completed on all buildings except the recreation hall, which will be completely inclosed by this week-end.

The buildings consist of a wooden frame-work of two by fours and two by six and eights. Over this is laid an inch coating of rat-proof weather proof, fire resisting composition board. The outer covering of the buildings is of wood strips one inch thick and eight inches wide, held in place by inch and one-half moulding. This is then painted with a creosote and varnish stain composition. The roof is of wood and patent tar paper. Floors in the building are of matched horizontal strips under two-inch pine laid the length of the building.

Each building is heated by three stoves set in concrete bases. All structures are painted the same tone of brown or oak stain.

Present plans call for a landscaping of the property, laying out of stone and gravel roads and paths and the erection of wood bridges where necessary to ford small streams leading into the camp from Route 17.

The recreation hall, just being constructed is to be 48 feet long and 30 feet wide with an elevated platform or stage 16 by 16 feet at the north end and a recreational director's office and camp canteen at the south end.

Here amateur entertainment will be presented, reading matter will be on file and a program of activities carried out under the direction of William Rose. He also plans to take over four rooms in the administration building for the teaching of electricity, shop craft, motor mending and photography.

The five dormitory buildings house 32 men each. All are provided with a duffle bag, trunk, two complete uniforms and working equipment.

A large shed is being constructed in the rear of the main group of buildings for housing the trucks of the camp.

All this will be on exhibition at a big open-house night planned by Camp Commander Monroe.

G.A.R. Charter Given to Legion

The American Legion members and the Auxiliary sponsored a family party in the Legion rooms here Wednesday night. This affair takes the place of the annual Armistice Day celebration heretofore held by the Williams-Greengrass Post No. 730.

LAST G. A. R.

EUGENE ALBEE

A supper, prepared and served by members of the Auxiliary opened the observance. Informal speaking by various members of the post and auxiliary completed the supper program. Members of the Legion, their wives and children were in attendance.

The highlight of the night's program was the presentation of the Grand Army charter of W. W. Angle Post, to the Legion to be perpetuated.

Attorney Charles L. Crane, son of the last Grand Army commander, the late Milton E. Crane, made the presentation address. He outlined some of the history of the Grand Army post, talked of some of the deceased members and and of his desire that the Legion should have the charter now that the Angle Post has been disbanded through the deaths of all members except Eugene Albee, the sole survivor in this village, of the Civil War.

What Were You Doing First Armistic Day

What were YOU doing Armistice Day, November 11, 1918? What did you do, what did you think, how did you feel that morning at eleven o'clock? Eighteen years is quite a long time to look back to and remember with any degree of exactness. Ask nearly any person what he, or she, was doing at a given hour of a day even ten years ago and the answer would probably be, "I don't know".

Armistice Day, on the other hand, made a deep impression on almost every adult or child in the country. It was probably impressed more indelibly upon each person's mind than any other event in contemporary history. It would be interesting to turn back the clock eighteen years and learn what different people were doing on Armistice Day, November 11, 1918. What were YOU doing that day? The Advertiser would like to publish a number of letters from readers on this subject. For the best letter the publishers will give a year's subscription to either the Advertiser or the Sentinel; for the second best letter six months subscription.

Contest closes November 25th.

Pile Driving Scow Sunk Saturday—Up at Work Wed.

With a shrieking moan of its whistle the W. P. A. pile driving boat sank for a second time Saturday evening. Less difficulty was met in raising the scow this time and the pile driver was operating efficiently yesterday.

When the heavy rains of last week raised the level of the river too high to pour concrete it was deecided to take the scow below the dam for driving the last piles needed to complete the concrete dike. The mast was lowered and the boat towed under the bridge the last of the week and two men left to watch it Saturday night. Evidently during the time the boat stood on the bar out of water the joints dried out so the craft sprang a bad leak and went to the bottom near the bank just above the mill dam. The local fire pumper was utilized to pump the water out of the hull Sunday and Monday so the craft is now afloat again and the pile driver is functioning.

Work on the concrete dike was brought to a standstill for several days by the high water. However, water in the mill pond is now receding and one section of concrete was poured yesterday, while another set of forms was made ready to fill today.

Mrs. Ellen Buck of Corning, Mrs. Theodore Smith and son Franklyn of Tuscarora and Mrs. Lucy Buck were dinner guests Thursday of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Beatty.

The Rev. Carl Grabb Armistice Day Speaker at Addison High

Pastor of Painted Post Presbyterian Church Tells Audience in Local Auditorium That American Legion Believes in Universal Draft—Ceremony Held in Observance of 18th Anniversary of End of World War.

"The American Legion believes in the universal draft, which means the drafting of men, arms, industry and wealth of a nation in times of war", the Rev. Carl Grabb, pastor of the Painted Post Presbyterian Church told members of the audience at the annual Armistice Day celebration held in the Addison High School Tuesday afternoon. The ceremony was part of the school and village observance of the 18th anniversary of the armistice ending the World War.

The Rev. Grabb told the junior members of his audience that they would have to carry on the traditions of the G. A. R. and the American Legion, for the members of the last named organization are fast taking the places of the G. A. R. and will soon be unable to carry on the American traditions.

The observance, which was attended by many parents of school children and people of this vicinity, was opened by the high school band under the direction of Prof. Joseph Greyback. The band played "America." Edwin Auringer and Walter Perkins, Boy Scouts, acted as color guard.

Principal Irving R. Gladstone opened the formal part of the program and turned the meeting over to the Rev. John V. Axtell who gave the prayer. Dr. Amos G. Stiker, member of the American Legion was introduced as chairman of the program. In his preliminary remarks he said, "It is up to you boys and girls whether America has peace or war. Our day is done and yours is coming as future citizens of America."

The maroon and gray clad high school band then played "Young Men of America" after which Miss Ruth Sherwood gave the wartime poem, "In Flanders Fields."

All in the auditorium stood in silence for 30 seconds as a tribute to the nation's wartime dead. The present day soldiers were lauded in the musical selection "The Seventh Regiment March."

In introducing tthe speaker of the day, Dr. Stiker stated that the same initiative and character which caused the Rev. Grabb to rise from a private in the field artillery to lieutenant brought him from a private in the ranks of civilians to a lieutenant in the ranks of God.

The Rev. Grabb opened his talk by two wartime stories, the first on William Newman of this village and the second on Adolph Hitler, German leader. He said, in part: "I am glad for Armistice Day for it ended four years of the world's worst catastrophe. Time slips by and our memory fails us. You here knew about the Armistice before we abroad did. We all know in the light of later events how utterly foolish was the war.

"Again people of the world are talking war but to those who saw men maimed, who saw the horrors of war and war's dead, they will not be for war again. Those experiences do not justify war.

"I do not say war is not justified, for if some one violates my house, it is only natural for me to fight and the same holds true of nations, so I do not say, war is never justified, nor would I say I would not bear arms under any circumstances.

"There is no country where you have the privileges you have in America today, no country where after an election there is such spirit as here. There are some who are trying to undermine the country. Let them go back to their home country. This is the best nation in the world and I make no exceptions.

"The ideals of this nation must be pprotected. You young people must keep alive the memories and traditions of Armistice Day. Pay more respect to the Flag. Yes, it is just a piece of bunting, but it has the ideals and traditions of America.

"Some people believe in total disarmament. I think that is foolish and see no sense in this. We must have an army and navy to protect ourselves. And so long as other nations know we can protect ourselves, just so long will they let us alone and respect us."

Scouts Charles Whitmore, Junior Wilson, Junior Reynolds and Harold Hargrave, in uniform, acted as ushers.

"The Late Christopher Bean" To Be Played Friday Evening

Addison Seniors to Present Their Annual Class Play at the High School Auditorium Nov. 13—Interesting Plot Woven Around the Work of an Unknown Painter Whose Pictures Come Into Sudden Demand.

Addison High School seniors are busy with rehearsals for the annual play, "The Late Christopher Bean", they will present Friday evening, Nov. 13. The curtain will go up at 8:00 P. M., and judging from reports of those who have witnessed it, this play will come up to the high standard of Addison school productions which always draw a capacity house.

The plot of the play is built around the old truth that great painters seldom receive recognition during their life time. It was that way with Christopher Bean. He was so poor that all the villagers save Abby, the cook, thought his paintings worthless. Dr. Haggett held so low an opinion of them he used the canvases to stuff into leaks in the roof. His daughter, Ada Haggett, utilized the backs to paint her own scraggly conception of art.

Then suddenly the world awoke to the greatness of Christopher Bean's paintings. New York art critics arrived on the scene to offer fabulous prices, and frantic searches were made from cellar to attic and even in the chicken coop to regain the abandoned treasures. As a token of gratitude for her understanding of his art, Christopher Bean had painted Abby's portrait. The picture was her most treasured possession and when the painter's genius became known, a great value was placed upon Abby's portrait. For a time it appears that the cook, not realizing the picture's real value, will give it up. The conclusion of the play comes in an unexpected way, leaving the audience pleasantly surprised.

Harry Chase plays the leading role as Dr. Haggett, a rural doctor who is transformed in a day into a scheming money-maker. Phyllis Martin has the leading woman's part, that of Abby, the Haggett's cook whose nature awakes both laughter and sympathy. The greedy "Hannah", Mrs. Haggett, nags her husband regarding his low financial state, the part being played by Mary Phillips. Evelyn Sherwood plays the part of Ada, the Haggett's eldest daughter, who imagines herself to be pretty and young, and starts a flirtation with every man in the play. Susan, the younger daughter, is different, being shy and retiring, but finds herself in love with Warren, the village painter and paper hanger, a love affair which encounters many difficulties. Betty Pepper takes the part of Susan, while Robert Dykins is Warren. Lynn Strait and Paul Richtmyer play the parts of two New York art critics who show Dr. Haggett how to do business. Tallant, the forger, a man who tempts Dr. Haggett to do business in a dishonorable manner, is played by Leland Phillips.

The school orchestra under the direction of Mr. Greyback, will furnish the music between the acts.

"Button, Button" Who Borrowed My Car?

The old Revolutionary War axiom, "Don't shoot till you see the whites of their eyes" might be paraphrased "Don't 'pinch' an apparent car thief until one knows he is stealing." Thereby hangs a tale.

A few hours ago an Addison man asked a friend for the use of his car to drive to the far end of the village. An hour later the donor of the car asked for his keys. After a frantic search the borower was about to admit he had lost the keys, when the car owner discovered he, himself had had them all the time. "Holy smokes!" exclaimed the car borrower, "I drove somebody's car, whose did I take?" Up to Thursday morning Chief Bovee had not called on him.

AN EXAMPLE

A short time ago there occurred the death of a man living in a nearby community, whose life is worthy of comment in certain ways. This man could not be said to have been noted in any particular field of endeavor; in education he was below the average, he never had been able to accomplish any outstanding thing during a lifetime of work. He was not even successful in the management of his business affairs, yet this man did win universal respect within his own circle because of native honesty of character. And honesty of character is something which should not pass without comment in these days.

This man worked hard all his life. When he reached manhood his parents became semi-dependent upon him, so this young man gave up youthful life plans for activity in another sphere, to labor on the homestead farm. Years slide away rapidly in this life and the time came when this young man was no longer young, and the brave plans put aside at first temporarily, had to be abandoned for all time. Eventually health failed and with its loss came adversities of many kinds.

Then came the time of easy government spending. People began to ask their government for aid, many seeking assistance who never before had dreamed of accepting charity in any form. Yet this man did not ask for help. Even at the last when stricken unto death, tortured by pain with the end but a few days away, he was not willing to be aided. Only when he learned that property he owned could be used to defray the expense, would he consent to be removed to a hospital for an emergency operation. It was too late—he lost his life, but one thing this man never did lose, and that was his self-respect.

During a time when it is so easy for many people to ask for every favor a beneficent government can bestow, it is surprising to find one man who will cling so tenaciously to an old tradition against public aid. No one should be called upon to suffer for the lack of medical attention as he did—it is not necessary anyone should suffer real need in these times or any other times and humanity demands they should not. But it is necessary that able-bodied people should once again develop a semblance of the old self-reliance which characterized our citizens during the pioneer days and later.

A few years ago no self-respecting person would accept public aid, if there was any possible way to avoid it. This man referred to above still held to that old American theory. It is to be hoped that when the gathering forces of recovery shall have provided jobs for all able to work, there will be an end to the late tendency which held the government owed everyone a living. All in real need should be cared for at public expense, but the belief too often expressed lately, take what you can because it is free, must be dispelled if this society shall continue to exist.

BANKERS' APPETITES BETTER

Kentucky bankers heard optimistic reports of business from all sections of the state, which touches and has economic relations with eight other states, and of a reduction in the state debt at the opening of their association meeting here. They are entitled to defy indigestion at their banquet. These men who bore the burden of other people's financial worries couldn't have had much appetite for several years.

It is no joke. Probably no other class of business, trade or profession, carries the mark of physical and mental strain that bank and trust officers do. No other probably has had as high a percentage of casualties from the depression.

Advice not to take one's business cares home with him is easier to give than to follow. A person can do all that is humanly possible in his personal affairs and resign himself to the inevitable; but the banker had everybody else's trouble on his mind besides his own and the bank's. The dire distress of widows and orphans of friends and relatives, of business and its employees—desperate appeals that stirred the sympathies—couldn't be locked up in the bank when the day's work was over. Taut nerves and wearied brain couldn't relax at the sound of a clock striking.

The simple pleasures of a good night's rest and a relish for good must still be accounted the most prized assets on the banker's personal balance sheet.—Louisville Courier Journal.

THE TRUTH OUTS

It is probable that every successful business faces, at one time or another, false, unjustified and malicious criticism.

Such a business is the Dairymen's League Co-operative Association, Inc., a pioneer farmer-controlled cooperative in the New York Milk Shed.

It has been claimed that the League is the tool of distribution interests and that it is not primarily interested in the welfare of its members.

Now the Federal Trade Commission has issued a report for Congress, following a long investigation of milk conditions in New York. And the Commission says that the League is a true co-operative, and is not controlled by distributors.

So the truth outs at last. And the air is cleared of misrepresentation and prejudice, caused, no doubt, by envy of the League's success in serving its members and the public.

STILL THE LIFE OF TRADE

If you have a few grey hairs, you'll probably remember the oldcrossroads store. This store was distinguished by the open cracker barrel and fly-ridden counters and show cases. Prices were high. Service was poor. Selection of goods was extremely limited—you were lucky if you could find the product you wanted, much less have a choice of brands. Often fresh fruits and vegetables were completely unobtainable in edible condition—the storekeeper had no facilities for properly keeping perishables, and wasn't interested in improvements. As for sanitary conditions—well, the less said the better.

Happily for all concerned, that store is gone. In its place—even in hamlets—are stores which are models of good merchandising. Prices are reasonable, and compare favorably with those in effect in large cities. A wide selection of canned and packed goods is on the shelves. Glassed-in display equipment has made life hard for flies and other insects. And modern refrigeration keeps perishable goods in first-class condition.

This change has been partly the result of evolution. And it has also been partly the result of honest competition. Stores spruced up if they wanted to hold their trade.

The upshot is that the consumer gets more and better goods for his money—and the storekeeper who is on his toes is better off than he ever was. Competition is still the life of trade—and the old cracker barrel is gone forever.

WHAT'S AHEAD

Now that election is over and Mr. Roosevelt has been re-elected by a large majority the country for the most part is chiefly interested in what radical changes, if any, the President is planning to put in effect.

Among the supporters of the administration there are as many shades of opinions as to what lies ahead, as there are among those who were opposed to his re-election. On the one side can be found such conservative elements as the New York Times, a newspaper which vigorously condemned many of the New Deal experiments, yet stood pat upon its Democratic traditions and advocated the Roosevelt election. Conservative senators like Glass and Byrd, who vigorously opposed much New Deal legislation, but announced they would vote for Roosevelt. And then there is the real "left" element in the administration family exemplified by men like Tugwell, Wallace and Ben Frank.

It is confidently expected by everyone that these last will be quick to explain the election results as a victory for their own radical ideas. Already it is reported these New Dealers are working on prospective legislation to extend government powers and bureaus and to re-establish the NRA in some form or other. Will these men retain the ear of the President now that election is over, or will he give heed to some of the counsel of the Glass-Byrd faction? That is a question millions of Americans would like to have answered for a surety.

It was conceded by many keen political analysts that the Supreme's Court's voiding of NRA and the AAA with such obnoxious features as the potato tax, had saved Roosevelt from a wave of indignation which was beginning to gather because of these measures. Many prominent Democratic Senators and Congressmen are aware of that fact and will be determined to prevent the passage of similar legislation to discredit their own party. Will this conservative bloc of Democrats combined with the handful of Republicans, be able to block the radical element? The country, especially the informed people in the country, will be watching eagerly during the next few months to see which way Congress will go. If it appears the conservative bloc may hold back the radicals, then most certainly the types of business which have thus far lagged, will hasten the flood of recovery.

If the New Dealers get full control of the machinery of government business will still appear to boom for a time. There will be continued huge commitments of government spending for many things, but recovery will not be on a sound basis. It will be the inflationary method of expansion which leads straight to future trouble.

If Roosevelt will proceed to balance the budget and thus gain the confidence of business men the country over, Americans can breathe a sigh of relief, but until the next early months unfold the possible trend of coming events, we shall all be in for a season of uncertainty. Everyone is asking now, "What's ahead?"

THE CAMPAIGN IS OVER, IT'S SAFE TO TAKE 'EM OFF NOW

Chief Significance of Election Seen in Results for Congress

By MARK SULLIVAN

THE full significance of the Democratic victory cannot be grasped by considering it as an isolated event. It cannot be understood by comparing this one election with other single elections. It cannot be grasped by looking merely at the two elections of Mr. Roosevelt, in 1932 and 1936.

To see the deeper meaning it is desirable to look at the five Congressional elections since and including 1928. In these five Congressional elections there has been a steady tide in the Democratic direction. This tide is not, I think, duplicated in our history. And what the election tells us is that the tide is not ended.

Consider the number of Democrats elected in the five elections to the House of Representatives; observe the increase every time:

1928.....	Democrats elected.....	165
1930.....	" "	219
1932.....	" "	313
1934.....	" "	322

For the present year, 1936, the final figures are not available. But at the time I write it is estimated that the Democrats have gained seven members of the House. If this is correct the figure for 1936 is still higher:

1936.....Democrats elected.....329

Here is a tide running in one direction for eight years. And we can only say that the tide is still rising.

This is the condition which Republicans, and all opponents of the New Deal, must take account of. To the Republicans it is a somber condition and a surprising one. I doubt if one Republican in the country or, for that matter, one Democrat thought the Democrats would elect more members of the House this year. Practically all thought that the height of the Democratic tide had been passed in the Congressional election of 1934, which was itself remarkable, and that this year would see the beginning of ebb.

Let us now query: To what extent is this tide Democratic and to what extent New Deal? To what degree is the tide due to Mr. Roosevelt personally? Suppose that in 1932 some other Democrat had been nominated for President instead of Mr. Roosevelt; suppose the 1932 Democratic candidate had been an orthodox Democrat, Albert Ritchie or Mr. Newton D. Baker, for example. In that event, would the Democratic tide still be rising as it is today? Probably the answer is that to some degree the tide is due to Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal.

A current running like this, and expressing itself in such an overwhelming election must mean that in the country there is some deep wish, some strong aspiration which the Republican party does not meet and which it must take into account. Unless it does, it will not only fail to win elections; it will fail even to fulfill the function of an effective opposition party.

The election, seen as a new climax in a growing tide, is very significant. Seen as just one election, it is not so striking as it appears. The complete figures are not in, but it seems probable that the losers, the Republicans, will poll something like 39 per cent of the total popular vote.

Thirty-nine per cent of the total popular vote is a fairly impressive share for any loser. This is not the first time the losing party in an election has fallen below 40 per cent of the total popular vote. So far as the figures of the popular vote are yet available, it seems as if the Republican share this year would not be materially less than the Democrats' share in 1928 when Al Smith was their candidate, or in 1920 when James M. Cox was their candidate. On both those occasions the Democratic obituary was written by many a Republican editor, and privately by not a few discouraged Democrats. Yet within a few years the Democrats were winning elections as elections were rarely won before.

Thirty-nine per cent of the popular vote, if that is the Republicans' share, can compose a quite respectable opposition party—provided the party has the ideas and the men with which to grow.

Post-mortems of elections usually inquire whether any candidate other than the late defunct might have done better. In this case, probably not. Conceivably some ideal Republican candidate might have done very much better. But the Republicans had to find their candidate among flesh-and-blood men, and among a limited number of these, the ones who had attained some degree of public position. Among such, probably, Mr. Landon was as good as any. Yet it is also true that no other candidate could have done much worse. Had the Republicans nominated either Mr. Hoover or Mr. Ogden Mills, they would certainly have got as many votes, and might have kept a greater integrity of position for the party.

If there is to be ungracious reproach of a defeated candidate, probably it would be fair to complain that Mr. Landon, by his manner of campaigning, somewhat compromised the Republican position. In some respects he tried to out-deal the New Deal. In two respects at least he tried to excel the New Deal in promises of largess. Where Mr. Roosevelt had set up old-age pensions for which the beneficiaries pay half the cost, Mr. Landon proposed to grant old-age pensions without any specific cost to the beneficiaries. Mr. Landon's old-age pensions were to be paid for by the general taxpayer. Similarly, Mr. Landon's promise to the farmers was more generous than Mr. Roosevelt's. He was going to give the farmer cash, raised by general taxation, without any obligation upon the farmer to do anything in return.

Any candidate who would challenge Mr. Roosevelt to a competition in promising must be credited with more courage than judgment. The fact that Mr. Landon made some promises exceeding Mr. Roosevelt's is going to make it difficult for the Republicans to get back to an opposing position.

The Election

By WALTER LIPPMANN

The character of the returns disposes of the idea trat the president's victory is due to a sectional or a class alignment in American politics. The cities voted heavily for him, but so did the country-side, the industrial centers, where the more recent immigrants and their children predominate, the agricultural communities, peopled by the older American stock. It cannot be argued in the face of these returns that his victory was bought by relief money, for the recipients are only a fraction of his great majority. Though a certain amount of class consciousness was felt on both sides, I am inclined to believe that it was no greater than in the election of 1928, when Al Smith was running. There was some bitterness, but not more bitterness than in 1916, in 1920 and in 1928.

The election, in short, may be called a normal American landslide in which the victor polled the votes of all sorts of people in every part of the country. The result calls for no subtle interpretation, for no attempt, as the French say, to find twelve o'clock at quarter past two. By the test which great masses of voters always apply, the party in power had governed successfully: under its aegis the standard of life of the people has risen spectacularly and there is promise of still better times. The party in opposition was divided and disorganized: its old leadership was discredited and it had found no new leaders. That made a decisive Roosevelt victory certain and every seasoned political observer has known it for more than a year.

There has never been a time since the business recovery really took hold in 1935 when the Republicans had reason to hope for anything more than the restoration of a respectable opposition. Mr. Roosevelt's victory was as certain as Mr. Coolidge's in 1924 and Mr. Hoover's in 1928. It was certain for the same reasons and it is at bottom a victory of the same character. Messrs. Coolidge and Hoover had landslides in spite of Teapot Dome because this country was and is interested in good times. Mr. Roosevelt has a landslide because times are much better. Without the better times his social idealism and his program would have gotten him nowhere.

In short he has won not because the people have any special belief in his policies, but because they approve of the result. A decade ago they voted no less enthusiastically for diametrically opposite policies because then too they approved the results. It is, to paraphrase Cleveland, a condition and not a theory which has determined the outcome.

The figures are, of course, far from being complete. But judging by the vote in New York State, it is, I think, clearly accurate to say that Mr. Roosevelt's victory is the kind of landslide which has been normal in American politics ever since the war. Beginning with 1920 the winner has had between 55 and 65 per cent of the vote of the two parties; the loser roughly between 28 and 42 per cent. There has been no close election for sixteen years, and judging by New York, Mr. Roosevelt is a winner by the same kind of majority as Harding in 1920, Coolidge in 1924, Hoover in 1928, and he himself in 1932. Governor Landon appears to have fared no worse and no better than Mr. Cox, Mr. Davis, Mr. Smith and Mr. Hoover (1932). He seems to have the normal minority party vote of approximately two-fifths of the electorate.

Mr. Roosevelt's vote in the electoral college breaks all records for a hundred years in a two-party contest. But this means only that a Democratic landslide registers a greater electoral vote than an equally strong Republican landslide. The reason is obvious. There are some Southern states which it is impossible for the Republicans to carry. If that fact is taken into account, the electoral vote for Harding was just as complete, for in 1920 the Democrats did not carry so much as one of the border states. And substantially, Coolidge's victory in the electoral college was as complete, considering he was a Republican, as Mr. Roosevelt's, in view of the fact that he is a Democrat.

If this analysis is correct, the predominance of the Democratic party may be regarded as no less than that of the Republicans after 1896 and again after 1920. That is to say, it is assured until, because of bad times or some radical change of circumstances, such as a war in Europe, the existing party allegiances are once again dissolved.

I hope it will not sound like grudging acceptance of the result to say that the President and the country would be better off if there were a more substantial opposition. Mr. Roosevelt would have been saved many a costly mistake had he had an opposition to consult and to conciliate, and if we look back in the past it is evident that the corruption under Harding, the drift and complacency under Coolidge, and the initial and irreparable blunder of Hoover with the tariff were all due to the feeling of undisputed power and the lack of an alert opposition. These things are hard to remember in the hour of victory, but the record shows that undisputed power makes for mistakes that finally recoil violently on its possessor.

It is certainly not the President's fault, but it is his loss, that the Republican party is at present so feeble.

The Republicans had an idea of the most fundamental sort. Though they could not have been elected on it this year, the idea would have served admirably to reorganize the party and to attract men who would eventually have become its leaders. That idea was the maintenance of a free, competitive capitalism under a decentralized government of limited powers. But this idea required the abandonment of certain Republican traditions and the recognition that in a changed world some of the orthodoxies must change, too. It was no use, for example, to talk about free enterprise without a convincing conversion to much freer trade. It was no use talking about prosperity and re-employment and the ending of doles and relief without exhibiting an understanding of the fact that in the modern world these good things depend upon a successful management of money and credit. It was no use talking about free enterprise without a convincing program to deal with monopolistic practices.

Now the fact is that Governor Landon and his advisers soon lost interest in reorganizing the party on the foundation of the ideas they professed. They became entirely concerned with a futile effort to win by picking up batches of votes. After the Des Moines speech on agriculture, after the Minneapolis speech on the tariff, the intellectual and moral integrity of their campaign was destroyed. They lost at once the interest and active co-operation of the men, small in number to be sure, who really understand what a system of free enterprise requires if it is to be maintained. The collaboration of these men, who represent a vital part of the Democratic party, was indispensable if an opposition to the collectivism of the New Deal was to be constituted. To put it plainly: they cared more for Al Smith as a supposed votegetter than for the convictions of a Newton D. Baker or a Lewis W. Douglas. After that the opposition disintegrated. For it lacked the only thing which could have held it together—principles entertained with conviction.

From that point onward the Republican managers showed how desperate they were by the manner in which they began to scratch for votes. The bank scare, the insurance scare, the red scare, the social security scare: these were the devices of politicians trying to win by stampeding the ignorant. All they accomplished by these stunts was to disgust the enlightened and to display the incoherence and demoralization of the party.

It is a pity. For Governor Landon is an upright, a genuine and a discerning man. But the fatal delusion of his advisers that they could elect him led him finally to think that he could stoop to conquer. By that he missed his real opportunity, which

No Defeatist Complex in GOP Camp Following Election Typhoon

Albany—The New Deal typhoon, having had its way with Republicanism in the state and nation, has swept on towards the sea of another four years of administrative effort, leaving in its wake the wreckage of GOP hopes for party success, and leaving survivors of the gale a trifle bewildered, but none the les full of fight.

It has been written, and perhaps truly, that "An elephant never forgets", but in the case of the GOP elephant, he already appears to be well on the way towards putting aside the memories of the debacle of November 3, and concentrating not on the past, but rather upon efforts to rebuild the party for the future.

While, by no stretch of the imagination, can it be said that "A spirit of optimism reigns in GOP councils", neither can it be said that anything resembling a defeatist complex prevails among the party's "best minds". Innured to the uncertainties of politics and the varying outcome of campaigns, philosphic acceptance, mingled with definite determination to "go places" has been the prevailing sentiment in the party since the New Deal deluge.

In the forefront of the reasons for the general belief that, the Republican Party, instead of "being dead", is still very much alive, is the fact that checked and rechecked election returns will probably show that in the 122,772 election districts in the nation, Governor Landon polled 18,061,682 votes, as against the 29,013,657 polled by President Roosevelt. It is naturally conceded that such a margin of victory for Mr. Roosevelt is a tidy triumph, to hang up a new record is understatement, but any party that polls more than eighteen million votes can still be, and will be, a great force in public affairs.

Newspaper headline treatment of the election results in the nation—the headlines making known that Governor Landon carried two states and won eight electoral votes—does, it is freely agreed, result in mal de mer of a high order. Yet, those eighteen million votes for Governor Landon represent an antidote of reasonable efficacy and serve, in a measure, to relieve the headache of the Republican pachyderm. In any event, who will deny the elephant's ability to survive headaches and, rising again from the ashes of crushing defeats, stagger on to new combats and—new victories?

Remember, if you will, the condition of the Republican Party late in 1932, 1933 and early in 1934. In those periods lines from the poem, "The Burial of Sir John Moore" were applicable, and they went like this: "Not a sound was heard nor a funeral note, as his corpse to the ramparts we hurried. Not a soldier discharged a farewell shot, o'er the grave of our hero-we buried'" Yet, somehow, the hero—in this case the elephant, was exhumed from a gloomy grave and, with new life breathed into him, he went charging off to lock horns with the New Deal menagerie. True, he was crushed to earth again on November 3, but party doctors are at work reviving him now and he should soon be moving forward, bellowing defiance, at those he considers to be his foes and the foes of his country. And, as he moves forward, his sons and daughters will continue to chant, as they are chanting now, defiance, even if a slightly treble "Speed on, Oh pachyderm; let courage go with you, and let vigor mark your attack!"

Ever since the election returns were counted, newspapers throughout the state have been warm in their praise of the spectacular and unusual "run" made by former Supreme Court Justice William F. Bleakley, Republican nominee for Governor. "The Judge", not particularly well known outside of Westchester County prior to his nomination at the Republican State Convention last September, was able, within a period of some thirty-four days, to so impress his personality and his policies for State government upon the people of the sixty-two counties, that he ran more than 256,000 ahead of Governor Landon in New York State, and, according to figures published in the press, carried every up-state county except three—Albany, Schenectady and Monroe.

Apart from the magnitude of the achievement of running so far ahead of the Republican candidate for President, a study of the vote polled by Judge Bleakley reveals some amazing facts. For example, in New York City he received some 214,440 more votes than did Governor Landon; Westchester gave him 54,800 plurality to Landon's 11,000 and Nassau gave him 33,552, or 13,000 more than Governor Landon received. Again, Governor Landon lost Erie County by approximately 30,910, and figures published indicate that Judge Bleakley carried that county by close to 700 votes. In Queens County "the Judge" received a terrific vote, carrying the 4th Assembly District by 2,000 and the 6th Assembly District by 3,700. Indeed, if the vote is scanned at length, one finds that he received more votes than were cast for Governor Lehman in 1934, when the Governor was a candidate against Robert Moses.

Mr. Bleakley and immediate associates of "the Judge", report that he has been swamped with mail and telegrams from all over the state congratulating him on the race he made and urging him to continue his interest in State-wide politics. Surveying the huge pile of correspondence, Mr. Bleakley avers, "Well, I'll answer the letters and telegrams at the earliest possible moment."

County Solons Considering Night Quarantine on All Steuben Dogs

Sheep killing dogs have cost this county nearly $15,000 during the last three months, according to Supervisor W. C. Newcomb, chairman of the agriculture committee for the Board.

With this in mind the members of the Board are to hold an open meeting for supervisors, sheep owners, dog owners and others interested. This meeting will be held Wednesday, November 18 in the Board Chambers, Bath.

The committee on agriculture is anxious to place a quarantine on dogs between the hours of sunset and sunrise. In other words no dogs be abroad during this time unless accompanied by an owner. It is believed this will fix responsibility upon the dog owners.

The members of the supervisory committee assisting Mr. Newcomb of Rathbone, are Frank Young, Tuscarora and Edward Haradon, Hornby.

Money for sheep lost from dogs is paid to the sheep owners from the dog tax monies collected in the county. This is approximately $16,000 annually. The fund will soon be exhausted at the present rate, and, according to Mr. Newcomb, unless drastic measures are taken, taxes will have to be raised on real estate to meet the expenditures for sheep.

To aid the local group in their war on dogs, C. C. Brayman, inspector for the New York Department of Farms and Markets and Arden Page, investigator for the dog license division of the same department will address the supervisors. They will urge this quarantine during the night hours.

In the Town of Urbana alone the cost for sheep killed by marauding dogs was over $2,000. There is a bounty of $8.00 placed on each dog killed while chasing sheep in this county. The bounty is paid by the board of Supervisors. This has aided the sheep owners but not enough to prevent more drastic measures being taken according to members fo the committee.

George King Expresses Thanks For Support Given in Election

Corning, Nov. 9—Attorney George A. King, elected district attorney of Steuben County by a majority of 9,222, is deeply appreciative of the support given by voters and the fidelity of those who worked to make his victory so decisive. In a statement sent The Addison Advertiser he says:

"As a boy in school I was taught that public office is a public trust and as I advanced into professional life, and came in contact with public officials, the importance of such a trust came to me with increasing force. Today the voters of this county have confided to me such a trust and I am more than ever conscious of the responsibility it carries.

"During my term of office it will be my unceasing endeavor to so cooperate with court and law enforcement officials that the dignity of the law may be upheld, that the work of my office will merit public commendation and that when I have completed my services those who supported me as well as those who opposed me may feel confident I have kept every pledge and been faithful to the trust reposed in me.

"My election was not due to any particular endeavor on my part but to the loyalty of devoted supporters throughout the county who gave freely of their time and influence in my behalf. I feel a deep sense of appreciation to the men and women, leaders of the county's civic, religious, fraternal and educational life who publicly endorsed my candidacy and to the newspaper editors who presented my message to their readers. Steuben County has every reason to be proud of its newspapers, daily and weekly, and I seek their co-operation in the work of the office to which I have been elected.

"It is my intention to be a real representative of the people of this county and, in turn, seek their confidence and their interested co-operation. For the votes cast in my behalf I thank you."

DID YOU KNOW?

A comparison of 1936 crop production in New York state with the past five-year average shows decreases for the following crops, in order of shortage: apples, grapes, cabbage, cherries, peaches, buckwheat, dry beans, tobacco, barley, pears, potatoes, oats, celery, hay, rye, canning tomatoes and corn.

Uncle Ab says the only reason for caring for money is in having it care for you.

Any large-scale war against rats should be started with poison, gas or blocking; never with traps.

When feed prices are high, poor cows lose more money for their owners. Close culling is recommended, but animals that are retained should be well fed.

Pullets that are decidedly undersized for their age may well be culled, as they seldom become good layers; the same may be true of pullets that are very large and coarse.

Suggestion For Holiday Shopping

Christmas is six weeks away.

Have you thought of the Christmas shopping for this season?

Merchants advertising in the Addison Advertiser are beginning to display their selections for the holiday season and are offering readers an opportunity to have ample selection of goods.

This early shopping is an experience. It means uncrowded stores, a large selection and plenty of time for choice selection. In addition it permits the final week to be used for wrapping, mailing and sending packages and planning other activities for the family and friends.

We don't like to rush the season, but feel that a helping suggestion now will be appreciated by our readers.

A TABLE setting contest lured 16,000 women into the linen department of a Chicago store. Several church women received an invitation to set tables. Customers voted for "best-set" tables. Money prizes were awarded the churches to which were affiliated the winning table-setters. Through this novel plan thousands of ladies, church-goers, paid a visit to this store, and to the linen department in particular. They purchased linens as well as merchandise in other departments.

In New York City, 18,000 women attended lectures in one of the downtown department stores where twenty correctly-set tables were on display. There were tables for every occasion. Questions of table etiquette and wine and table service were received and answered by the hostess-lecturer in attendance.

was to become the leader of a self-respecting opposition.

As for Mr. Roosevelt, his personal triumph is a great one. No man in all the world has a position like his, based as it is on the free suffrage of his fellow men. No dictator who elects himself by the unanimous vote of a terrorized people has any such title, or influence, or prestige. In the hour of his glory he has borne himself well. A victorious leader could not have spoken more magnanimously than did the President on election night through that wholly admirable speech of Mr. Farley's.

The problems of the nation remain. But at the moment, it is not fitting for one who voted against Mr. Roosevelt to do more than to acknowledge him as the unquestioned choice of the people, and to hope that he may have the strength he needs, and all good fortune besides, in the days to come.

Armistice Day—1936

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

For almost twenty years our nation has observed Armistice Day—with its eloquent reminder that the spirit of America is peace.

It is one of the most solemn of our national holidays—born of a period when America had reached a flood-tide of idealism.

Originally this observance expressed a spirit of thanksgiving for the ending of a grim and tragic war fought far beyond our national boundaries. But, with the years, it has developed a further meaning. It has become also a reminder of the need for peace and tranquillity within the nation, and for the spirit of patriotic citizenship which we honor at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

At this time, as always, the American people can re-dedicate themselves to that spirit, and to the high concept of citizenship it demands.

At this time they can determine to submerge differences based on conflicting aims and interests, and to think instead in terms of the welfare of the entire country. It is a time to remember that America was not built by one or by many separate groups, but by the people as a whole; a time to recall that public office remains a public trust, and that good citizenship entails responsibilities no less significant.

For America, as has been said, was a great land when Columbus discovered it. It became a great nation when the American people made it one.

Armistice Day, 1936, reminds us again of that solemn and inspiring truth.

Permanency in Agriculture Aim Of Farm Bureau

To build greater permanency in farming, to restore and maintain farm purchasing power, to develop farm-to-market roads and electric power lines, and to adjust the tax system to relieve real estate of the excessive burden it now carries, were declared by Clayton B. White, Director of the New York State Farm Bureau Federation to be the major objectives of the State body.

Mr. White spoke at the regional Rallies of farm bureau committeemen held throughout Steuben County last week to launch the annual membership drive. Several hundred committeemen and their wives met at Jasper, Corning, Bath, and Avoca, to prepare for the canvass which is to be concluded on November 17.

Attendance at meetings held by the Steuben County Farm Bureau in the current year is well above 5,000, there have been more than 2,000 office calls, and nearly as many farm visits have been made by the agents, according to the report presented at the meetings by Manager Stempfle.

The number of cows on test was increased from 2000 to 2800, new varieties of grain have been grown experimentally in a score of communities, soil tests were made on more than 2000 acres. The most extensive program in the history of the farm bureau has been carried on in the current year, and thousands of farmers have received personal service, he stated.

The Potato industry has received major consideration in 1936. The Ninth Annual Steuben County Potato Growers' Convention and Show was a feature event. Steuben County growers served on committees for the State Field Day and winter meeting. A rotation experiment and variety tests were other items.

Call League Directors To Study Dairy Crisis

New York, Nov. 7—A meeting of the Board of Directors of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc., was called today by Fred H. Sexauer, president, for November 18 to "consider the threatening crisis which may confront the dairy industry of the New York Milk Shed within the dents of the League were also called to attend the meeting.

"Dairy farmers will have increasingly high costs to meet in producing milk from now until spring," said Mr. Sexauer, "because of last summer's drought. The hay crop was short. Farmers had to start using hay and ensilage weeks earlier than usual. Their stocks of fodder will be exhausted before spring. Feed prices are 30 percent higher than a year ago, and are expected to go higher.

"Marketing conditions are unsatisfactory. Net returns to producers are too low in comparison with production costs. To avoid a critical situation which would be disastrous to both producers and consumers, it is necessary that constructive steps be taken soon. Our directors and county presidents have been studying the situation, and, I hope, will evolve some means of working out a remedy before the whole industry becomes demoralized and it is too late to save farmers from heavy losses."

Cornell Names New President

The next president of Cornell University will be Dr. Edmund Ezra Day, 53, director of the social science program of the Rockefeller

DR. EDMUND EZRA DAY

Since he joined the Rockefeller Foundation in 1927, his expert advice as a economist has frequently been sought by the Government. He was one of the two representatives of the United States on the Preparatory Commission of Experts for the World Monetary and Economic Conference in 1932-33.

Farm Bureau Committee Plans Dairy Program For 1937 Work

Every phase of the industry will receive attention in the 1937 program planned by the dairy committee of the Steuben County Farm Bureau, in a meeting recently held to review the work of 1936, and to develop plans for the new year.

Better breeding practices will receive attention in the continuation of the Better Sire Campaign, bull associations, and winter meetings and summer tours will be held to emphasize the value of better breeding methods.

An increase in the enrollment in the dairy herd improvement associations will be attempted. The dairy banquet and the dairy convention will be a feature of the year's activities.

A program to reduce losses from disease are recommended by the committee and facts in regard to this problem will be presented the dairymen of the county by means of meetings and demonstrations.

Marketing of both milk and livestock will receive major consideration. This subject is to be discussed at meetings, and a special committee will be organized to study the problem. As in former years the sale of surplus dairy cattle will be promoted.

The 1937 dairy program is being launched this week in a series of ten regional meetings held throughout the county for the discussion of feed problems and means of repairing the damage done meadows and pastures by last summer's drought.

Burton Ketch of Wallace, prominent Holstein breeder, was elected to serve as chairman of the dairy committee for 1937. He succeeds A. W. Norris of Kanona, who headed the bureau for the past three years.

How, What and Why

This paper has arranged with the Office of information of the New York State college of agriculture and home economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one post card. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Why the Fall?

Miss E. B. wants to know why flower bulbs are planted in the fall.

S. E. Wadsworth of the floriculture department answers: "We used to think that bulbs had to have a good set of roots formed in the fall so when spring came these roots could take up water and food rapidly to supply the fast-growing tops.

"Now, as a result of studies, a different explanation is given. Bulbs are really small flower buds and leaves surrounded by layers of stored food. The buds in spring flowering bulbs are not mature now and could not flower even with spring weather. They must have time to mature, and they mature faster in a cool temperature. So, between now and when the ground freezes these buds hasten to prepare for their spring show."

Good Time to Start

C. H., asks: "Should I wait until spring to apply superphosphate or lime to the pasture?"

Professor G. H. Serviss of the agronomy department replies: "The answer is 'no.'

If you have already bought superphosphate, or superphosphate and limestone, or if you are able to buy it this fall, by all means apply it this fall. It may be applied up to December 1 or even later if the condition of the soil permits."

No Ice Box

A New York consumer writes that French fried potatoes are a gamble in her house. "Sometimes they have the light, golden brown color that they should have and taste delicious; but the next time they may be off in color, taste and texture.

"I buy carefully, and if I have room in my refrigerator I even give potatoes the extra care I give green vegetables."

The answer, from Consumers' Guide in Washington: "Refrigeration may be the cause of the trouble. Potatoes should be kept out of the refrigerator for best cooking quality.

"A good practice for consumers is to store potatoes at room temperature, and to avoid extremes of hot and cold."

Farm Payments Go To Thousands

More than 1,000 farmers throughout the state have received their payments under the Agricultural Conservation Program, according to an announcement by C. G. Bradt, executive field officer. Average payment on these thousand farms was nearly seventy-eight dollars.

fmong the first counties to receive checks were Allegany, Cayuga, Cortland, Chautauqua, Chemung, Delaware, Greene, Jefferson, Ontario, Orange, Oswego, Schuyler, Steuben, Ulster, and Yates.

Mr. Bradt says about 5,000 applications for payment have been sent to Washington and each day the state office at Ithaca forwards about 400 that have been completed and checked. Nearly all counties in the state have some applications at Washington for which checks will soon be drawn and mailed to the producer.

In each county field supervisors are working to complete reports of farmers and to inspect soil-building practices carried out. About 18,000 farms have already been inspected in the state, according to Mr. Bradt, leaving about 22,000 additional farms to be visited during November.

Farmers who have completed their practices and have a sketch map of their farms prepared are urged to notify their county office. An inspection is then made and the application for payment filled out. First checks were received by those who applied for an early inspection, Mr. Bradt says.

A revised Cornell bulletin E-281, tells what fertilizers to use for fruits, vegetables, flowers, lawns, field crops, pastures, house plants and trees. Single copies may be had from the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

FRUIT, FLOWERS AND GARDEN

CARE OF SHADE TREES
By G. E. Thompson

Autumn is a good time of year to clean up around shade trees and shrubs to prevent some of the tree diseases. Two important ways in which fungi, which cause these diseases, overwinter are through fallen leaves and dead twigs.

A good way to get rid of leaf troubles is to rake and burn fallen leaves. Also, if the leaves have piled up under the hedges or shrubs, they should be removed and destroyed. Dead twigs may be removed by carefully pruning at least two inches below the dead portion of the twig. Make a clean cut and avoid tearing the bark.. Cover the stub with shellac or with a thick coat of house paint. Dead branches should be burned.

Another winter trouble comes from breakage of branches on which ice or sleet has formed. Repair leaky eaves or provide a suitable run-off for water from the house if valuable trees or shrubs grow beneath the drip.

Autumn is also a good time to protect trees and shrubs that are not frost hardy. Cover them with boxes or with suitable shelters. If this is inconvenient, protect the roots by covering their bases with straw or other litter.

BRASS TACKS For POULTRY RAISERS

By BURTON P. THARP

PARALYSIS

Paralysis in poultry is a disease with which a great many farmers and back yard poultry fanciers as well as professional poultrymen have had to fight this year. The losses have varied greatly in different flocks. The largest losses have occurred in birds under six months of age although the diesase affects birds of all ages.

As the name of the disease implies the symptoms are the loss of use of some part of the body. The legs, wings or neck or all of these members may be affected. Usually the birds have a diarrhea which leaves the feathers around the vent stained. Loss of appetite and loss of flesh follow. Some birds may become blind.

Although paralysis usually kills a bird in a few days the writer has brought several back to a healthy condition and the use of the limbs has returned. The birds have lived to become good producers again and apparently suffered no ill effects. Birds which were blinded regained their sight.

The affected birds were placed by themselves where they could get a great deal of sunshine. An all-mash feed rich in cod liver oil was placed within their reach. No grain was fed. Green vegetables supplemented the mash.

In using a cheap mash or one that is mixed at home the necessary minerals and vitamins may be added to it by mixing ten pounds of alfalfa meal, five pounds of bonemeal and a quart of high grade cod liver oil to each 100 pounds of mash. A high grade starting mash may be used. Wet the mash if necessary in order to help the birds to get enough to keep up body weight. After the birds recover grain may be fed again but a good mash should be given along with it.

Obviously only a small number of birds can be treated and their value after recovery is questionable. Certainly they should not make good breeders.

For the average poultryman the wise procedure is to kill and burn all affected birds and dispose of the remainder of the flock. Clean and disinfect the house and yard and all equipment. Your local druggist or feed dealer can recommend a suitable disinfectant. Poultry should not be kept on the premises for a year or more.

The Late Walter E. Ames, Former Addison Man, Trustee of Printers' Home—Started With Advertiser

By WILLIAM H. RIAL, Batavia, N. Y.

In a booklet illustrative of the Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs, Colorado, recently published, is a picture of Walter E. Ames, a former Addison resident, who died in 1930 and who served 12 years as trustee of the institution, which was in 1886 endowed $10,000 by George W. Childs, then editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and his business associate, Anthony J. Drexel.

WALTER E. AMES

Mr. Ames was a student in 1886 in the Addison Union School, in the wooden structure at Curtis Square which preceded the brick structure. He had a longing to become an exponent of the art preservative and so secured an opening to printerdom in the Addison Advertiser office, Amos Roberts then being the editor and his assistants included Frank B. Orser and James Coakley. Mr. Ames learned the type cases, the period being in the hand-setting days, and also how to give the right faces and proper balance to advertisements and to job printing, so that when later he left for the West he had a fair idea of craftsmanship.

It was in Milwaukee, Wis., that Mr. Ames in 1913 was elected trustee of the Printers' Home, maintained by 78,000 members of the International Typographical Union of the United States and Canada, with headquarters in Indianapolis, Ind. The main building of the Home contains 78 individual fireproof rooms, with an entertainment auditorium seating 430 persons and a library of 12,000 volumes. Of the executive council Charles P. Howard is president and Woodruff Randolph secretary-treasurer.

The Ames family was of pioneer stock. Ambrose Ames of Amesville, in the eastern section of Addison, was an early-period manufacturer of lumber products. Charles Ames was at one time a prominent Addison business man. Walter E. Ames became widely known in printing circles.

Parents Painted Post Pioneers

Norman S. Easterbrook, who died in Avon on October 16, 1936, at the age of 67 years, a writer of philosophical and religious articles, whose career as a newspaper man began with the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle in 1896, was a native of Steuben County. He was born in Painted Post, his parents, pioneers, being Isaac and Amanda Easterbrook. Isaac Easterbrook was an Episcopal clergyman. Norman was educated at Starkey Seminary. In 1907 he married Miss Martha F. Cole of Gorham. The couple had three children. Mr. Easterbrook's brother, Lee W., resides in Hawaii.

There was something like premonition in an article that Mr. Easterbrook wrote just 12 days before his death. The title was "Preparing for Rest", in which he said: "There is a similarity between the routine of the seasons, but there is a difference as wide and deep as the gulf between heaven and hell. The things of nature rest and awaken again in the same life from which they fell asleep. After due preparation man falls asleep, where he finds rest for a longer or shorter length of time, when he also awakens, but into a different life than that from which he passed in sleep. This may be a better life than the one he left behind, or it may be worse, its nature depending on how the first life was lived.

"Nature works through laws that never vary. While man, too, is a creature of law, he can make his life conform to higher laws than nature knows. His rest will be a sacrament that may not be described. His awakening will be in the Kingdom of Heaven, where life abounds in fullest measures."

The remains of Mr. Easterbrook were interred in the Gorham Cemetery.

Pugilist Temperance Worker

In the early gay nineties Addison was all stirred up over the subject of temperance. There had been Murphy pledges signed in previous times, the signers being given a bit of blue ribbon and a neatly printed card, on which was denounced the doings of John Barleycorn. P. A. Burdick delivered lectures in the 80's and among his converts was Joe Hess, a pugilist, whose home was at Clarendon, Orleans County. Hess was a magnificent specimen of physical manhood. He could make an Addison audience wince when he tossed a fist in the air during his remarks. Yet in October, 1893, one day he suddenly was stricken with paralysis and died, only 43 years of age. This only goes to show how uncertain is the span of human life, even to the strongest.

There was always quite a joke about the manner in which Addison temperance campaigns turned out. There would be grand meetings and men by the scores would be on hand to applaud and drop nickels in the collection basket, but when an excise election was held the temperance ticket was snowed under like an Artcic storm had swept over it. James Baldwin, a banker, was an earnest temperance campaigner.

Maple Street Popularity

How many Maple streets do you figure there are in the United States? Addison has a Maple street. In fact, in 1893 the Addison Board of Trustees had to restrain the growth of maple trees on Maple street, in front of the residence of Horatio Guinnip. Charles D. Reynolds, acting village clerk, was instructed to notify Mr. Guinnip to remove four maple trees which were six feet or more south of the line of the sidewalk. The Board of Trustees was then composed of John James, George Allison, Almon Beeman, Arthur P. Hill and Charles D. Reynolds. Frank B. Orser later became village clerk.

This Week's 10 Best Games

By LEO BOLLEY

(Editor's Note: Every week in this paper Leo Bolley, former football star at Niagara University and now one of the best known experts in the sport reporting world, will discuss the ten best games for the coming week-end. Follow Bolley's predictions and be ahead of the crowd in football knowledge.)

A startling series of upsets has downed the old intersectional champions and crowned the new ones in this most surprising season in recent years. Ever since I first began following football I have never seen such amazing reversals of form taking place in all parts of the country.

You may remember that I was one of the very few to pick Northwestern to snap Minnesota's great victory streak of 21 straight. But the epidemic of upsets has spread much further, and now we find but few of the old leaders remaining anywhere near the top.

Keeping in mind that anything may happen, I will make my selections of the ten toughest games for this Saturday, November 14. A bit of star gazing and ouija board work was needed to help me decide a couple of them. Here goes:

ARMY-NOTRE DAME: This is always a great spectacle and a great game. I give the nod to Notre Dame in this battle royal.

PRINCETON-YALE: The Tigers lack last year's punch and Yale has improved, which evens this one up. The breaks may decide, and I rather favor Yale to yank the game.

SYRACUSE-COLUMBIA: An improved Columbia team should take this one.

CARNEGIE TECH-DUQUESNE: Duquesne has a well balanced attack and a strong defense, so the Dukes are the choice for me.

HARVARD-NAVY: Harvard is coming along, but not fast enough to scuttle the Navy.

ILLINOIS-OHIO STATE: The Illini want this game but I think they will be disappointed. One vote for the Buckeyes.

NEBRASKA-PITTSBURGH: My selection here may surprise you, for I'm picking the Corn Huskers of Nebraska. They have what it takes and they are playing at home.

MICHIGAN-NORTHWESTERN: Michigan may have its punt, pass and prayer, but they don't seem to match the pluck, power and perseverance of Northwestern.

TEMPLE-VILLANOVA: A tough one to pick, but I favor Temple.

HOBART-BUFFALO: A classic in the smaller college group. Both should score and here's my choice—a tie game!

Now see how we match as experts. Another "ten best" next week.

Prices Announced For 1937 Chevrolet

New York, Nov. 6—Prices for the new Chevrolet passenger cars for 1937 were announced here today by W. E. Holler, vice president and general sales manager, upon his arrival for the National Automobile Show.

It was revealed that for 1937 Chevrolet would have a completely new line of cars, incorporating one wheelbase and with identically the same appearance. Heretofore, there have been two distinctly different lines of cars with two lengths of wheelbase and quite a wide variance of specifications.

Prices of the Master Deluxe models remain approximately the same as those of the 1936 cars. The popular coach and town sedan models have been reduced $5, while the four-door sedan and the sport sedan prices remain unchanged. The coupe and sport coupe are the only models to be increased in price and these only $5 over the 1936 levels.

Prices of the Master Deluxe Chevrolet now cover features formerly offered as optional at extra cost, including knee-action, safety plate glass all around, fenders in color matching the body, and larger tires. The individual model prices are as follows:

Coach, $595; sedan, $660; town sedan, with trunk, $620; sport sedan, with trunk, $685; business coupe, $585; sport coupe with rumble seat, $615.

The list prices of the Master Chevrolet, which also include the added equipment except knee-action, are uniformly $60 under the Master Deluxe prices.

Body models in the Master Deluxe and Master lines are the same except that the Master cabriolet with rumble seat takes the place of of a sport coupe in theDeluxe line. The Master wheelbase is 3¼ inches longer than that of the 1936 models and this model also includes as standard equipment syncro-mesh transmission, larger tires, safety plate glass and fenders in color to match the body.

Both models are completely new in engine, chassis and bodies, and are identical in design with the exception of knee-action and special features of equipment and interior trim supplied only in the Deluxe models.

High School Boxing Shows Improvement Over Last Year

The high school boxing matches held last Friday evening proved that the participants had greatly improved over their standing of last season. Although the matches were not of the knock-em down and drag-em-out style, the boys showed that they knew the art of self-defense, by their well blocked blows and shifty foot work. The main bout scheduled between John Smith and George Hopper, former High School champion, got under way with several exchanges of blows. In the second round the contestants accidentally bumped their heads and the bout was called off due to a serious cut over Hopper's eye.

Approximately two hundred and fifty fans were on hand to witness this first indoor sport activity of the year.

The participants were:

Sterling Cole Elected By Big Majority Writes Appreciation

Bath, Nov. 9—W. Sterling Cole, representative in Congress from the 37th District who was re-elected last Tuesday by a majority of 33,177, which is an increase of 13,292 over the vote given him in 1934, is receiving messages of congratulation from prominent Republican men and women all over the United States. Mr. Cole's vote record is outstanding. In 1934 he received the largest majority ever given a candidate for Congress in the 37 District and now has broken his own record and undoubtedly established a majority mark that will stand for years to come.

In a message expressing his appreciation, written for The Advertiser, Mr. Cole says:

"I have always stood as an exponent of majority rule and inasmuch as the majority of voters have expressed their desire to have President Franklin D. Roosevelt continue in office for a second term I believe that all citizens should put their shoulder to the wheel to the end that the United States, most blessed of nations, may occupy the place it merits and that all who live under the stars and stripes may have a fuller measure of happiness and prosperity.

"Republicans, who waged so vigorous a battle to win votes for the national and state candidates, need not feel discouraged by the outcome of the election. While it is true that 25,000,000 voted for the New Deal it is equally true that 15,000,000 voted against it so that those who wonder as to the party's future may cease their worry—a party of 15,000,000 supporters is a power that holds great possibilities.

"We face four momentous years and it is my wish that all citizens, regardless of party affiliation, cooperate to bring the greatest good to the greatest number, rejecting that which is alloy and supporting that which tests pure gold that this nation, under God, may fulfill its destiny, that the burdens oppressing all too many may be lifted, and that peace and contentment may be ours.

"I renew my pledge of two years ago to obey the will of the majority."

Scout Meeting to Be Held in Bath

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Steuben Area Council Boy Scouts of America of which Addison is and has for the past 15 years been a very real part is to be held at the Hotel Wagner in Bath on Monday evening, November 16. Invitations have been issued to all men identified in the Scouting to attend both the dinner at 6:30 o'clock, and the program which follows the meal.

The announcements state that a very minimum of business will be transacted. All reports of committee chairmen including the report of a special committee on nominations of members and officers for 1937 will be submitted in written form. These reports will be presented without comment by the several chairmen.

Following the meal two service awards will be made—The Scoutmaster's Key will be presented to Merrill F. Webb of Troop 28, Hornell and the Scouters Key will be presented to First Mate Warren Bonnell who is also an assistant scoutmaster of Corning Troop 11. Both these awards are for at least five years of successful troop leadership and five years of specialized training.

The main program will feature a forum discussion of the subject—SCOUTING IN STEUBEN—Three very brief statements will be read as follows, The Means by Attorney Clyde E. Shults of Hornell, The Methods by Scoutmaster Kenneth O. Frasier of Bath and the Objectives by Attorney Guy W. Cheney of Corning. Each man's paper may be discussed by all present. The program will operate on a radio type of schedule—twenty minutes for the Means presentation and discussion—thirty minutes for the Methods analysis and suggestions and thirty minutes for the Objectives statements.

This is a decided innovation in the program of the Annual Meeting according to Council President W. H. Curtiss of Corning who will preside. It is expected that comments will be made by Regional Scout Executive Gilbert H. Gendall of New York City and by Mr. Curtiss.

The preliminary outline of the purpose of this meeting states that the policies and programs for Scouting in 1937 will be evolved from these discussions by the men in the area.

The whole program is open to any interested men of the area. It is expected that several carloads will attend from Addison. Council membership comprises troop representatives, and members-at-large.

Reservations for the dinner are not required but may be made through Scout Commissioner Mr. L. R. Reynolds of Corning or any local troop leader.

Mrs. Ben Stuart spent a few days recently with friends at Coopers Plains.

Buck Jones in "For the Service" Coming Soon

Thrilling drama in the early days of the west gives rugged vitality to the exiting Buck Jones picture, "For the Service," a Universal feature just booked by the Avon theatre, for showing on Friday and Saturday.

Noted for his swiftly moving exploits against the colorful background of the West, the star reaches a new high in entertainment in this story of the grim, courageous scouts who gave their lives that the United States might extend from coast to coast. Savage Indians and cruel white men are confronted in Jones' relentless fight to save his captain's son, and serve his government. Dramatic incidents in army tradition provide the highlights of the story.

Dairymen Feeling Affects Of Last Summer's Drouth

Dairy farmers in the New York Milk Shed are now beginning to feel the worst effects of last summen's drouth, Mr. Sexauer's statement says. The drough caused a short hay crop, and in many sections a scarcity of ensilage. Farmers had to start using hay and ensilage during the late summer. Purchased feeds, which come from the west, are 30 per cent higher than last year, and are expected to be more expensive before spring.

Returns received by dairymen for milk are low in comparison with production costs, the League president points out. Market conditions are generally unfavorable, and there are numerous problems confronting the dairy industry including the question of interstate milk, surplus, price cutting dealers and others, which combined contain a threat to the stability and progress of the dairy industry.

The League's district officials are being called together to discuss these matters that they have been studying for months with a view to taking some constructive action looking toward an early solution.
